largely responsible. All that is meant to be here maintained is that if any student of economic affairs is convinced as a result of his own observation and reflection that the increase in the world's money supply has, for the time being, served to introduce an artificial element into the financial situation; that it has brought about a harmful and undue elevation of interest rates, and has business enterprise is being checked, then the last remedy he will seek to apply to TEETH WITHOUT PLATES; NO EXTRACTING; the trouble is "more money," since this will only aggravate existing evils.
Further, if the general economic conclusions referred to are to be adjudged ound, if it is, indeed, true that the reign of high prices in the country has come to unsettle the country's business, making it impossible for the manufacturers to obtain raw materials at a reasonable price, enhancing the cost of living, and pushing wages to a preposterously ele-vated level, then one of the first things that should be done is to reduce somewhat that high wall of tariff protective duties that in former days, for reasons good at that time but valid no longer, the country built around its industries.
